Craig Crandall is a young man who loves his work.

Craig, 28 of Springville, is a full-time farmer and was just named Outstanding Young Farmer of the Year by the Utah Farm Bureau.

He and his wife Elizabeth were among 18 couples vying for the award at the 71st annual Farm Bureau Federation convention in Salt Lake City.

"All of them are friends of ours from around the state. We were really happy to get the honor; this is the fifth year we've tried," he said.

The top prize is ownership of a 1989 Honda SX300 four-wheel, all terrain vehicle, awarded by the Utah Farm Bureau and the Utah Honda dealers. The honor also carries with it an all-expense paid trip for the couple to the American Farm Bureau Federation convention in San Antonio, Tex.

Crandall is a partner with his father and brother in a diversified family operation featuring range and feeder cattle, a cow-calf herd, replacement heifers and finished beef and sheep.

They have 150 sheep, 500 mother cows and a feedlot that holds 700 head. They farm around 800 acres of cropland and also have 2,000 acres of dryland wheat near Nephi and summer range near Heber City and Park City.

He reports that Jordanelle Reservoir will take their property near Heber City.

He has an associate degree in agricultural mechanics from Utah State University and has been in farming all his life.

Crandall said he loves the farming business.

"I can go home and have lunch and dinner with my wife and kids. Our farming operations aren't much more than an hour away. There aren't too many days that I have to take a lunch bucket," he commented.

"And my kids can come down here to the barn to be with me."

He said he has a good relationship with his dad and brother and they work well together.

He and his wife, the former Elizabeth Wright, are the parents of three children.
